THE INDUSTRIAL FRONT

TACHING—RED BANNER ON THE INDUSTRIAL FRONT

THE swift construction of the Taching Oilfield in the early 60 made China basically self-sufficient in oil. This was a great revolutionary feat in the history of China's industry.

The workers, cadres and technicians of Taching, led and educated by the Party, earnestly studied and applied Chairman Mao's On Practice and On Contradiction in a living way. They were imbued with the lofty aim of serving the people and the revolutionary spirit of self-reliance and arduous struggle. The efforts and wisdom of people like this made it possible to build Taching in less than three years.

During the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution, the people of Taching vehemently criticized and repudiated the crimes of the renegade, hidden traitor and scab Liu Shao-chi in enforcing his counter-revolutionary revisionist line. This greatly raised their consciousness in waging class struggle and the struggle between the two lines. Grasping revolution and promoting production with a will, they have scored new and even greater achievements. In recent years, by improving their method of pumping in water from the early stage, stratum by stratum scientifically, the Taching people succeeded in maintaining a constant pressure in wells which had been in operation for years. Thus output has remained high and stable for the past 11 years. The drill team 1205, which had set a drilling record of 100,000 metres annually, chalked up a new one of 60,000 for the first half of the current year. New oil-producing districts are being opened up and new wells are going into production one after the other. The output of crude oil has been rising rapidly at a rate of 30 per cent per annum. The total output of the five years beginning in 1966 was two and a half times that of the six years before the great cultural revolution, while the first five months of this year showed a one-third increase over the corresponding period of last year.

The road of Taching is one of developing industry according to Chairman Mao's proletarian revolutionary line. It fully embodies the Marxist-Leninist theory, line, guiding principles and policy for the development of industry laid down by Chairman Mao: "Go all out, aim high and achieve greater, faster, better and more economical results in building socialism", "Self-reliance and hard struggle" and "Break down foreign conventions and follow our own road in developing industry". Taching is a model in the living study and application of Mao Tsetung Thought. It sets a fine example for every other Chinese industrial enterprise.

Wang Chin-hsi

Denouncing the renegade, hidden traitor and scab Liu Shao-chi.

COMMUNIST Wang Chin-hsi was born in Yumen County, Kansu Province in 1923. After liberation, he worked as a driller searching for oil in the Gobi, and was several times honoured as an outstanding worker.

In March 1960, Wang Chin-hsi came to Taching, bringing with him Selected Works of Mao Tsetung which he had received as an award at a national conference of outstanding groups and workers in socialist construction. At the time, the drilling equipment could not be moved to the work-site immediately owing to the lack of trucks and cranes. Impatient, Wang declared, "Working for the revolution, we cannot wait. If we have the conditions, we'll go ahead; if not, we'll start work anyway, creating the conditions as we go along. We will never be held back by difficulties, no matter how great!"

And so with Wang Chin-hsi in the lead, the workers of drill team 1205 moved 60 tons of drilling equipment to the site by hauling with ropes and carrying with shoulder poles. They used wash-basins to fetch water when the existing supply turned out to be inadequate. It took only five days to drill the first high-quality well.

Taching was then a frozen expanse of wilderness. The workers lived in caves and ate cold food. For days on end, Wang Chin-hsi never left the work-site. When the local people, full of admiration, began calling him "Iron Man", the name stuck.

During the days of hard struggle to set Taching on its feet.

At the initial stage of construction, Wang Chin-hsi and other workers stood firm against the sinister wind swept up by the renegade Liu Shao-chi and his ilk who demanded that industrial enterprises should "get off the horse"* During the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution, he and other workers came forward to denounce the crimes of these class enemies. During the struggle, he defended Chairman Mao's revolutionary line staunchly and sharply repudiated their attacks and slanders against Taching with facts.

In April 1969, Wang Chin-hsi gloriously attended the Ninth National Congress of the Communist Party of China and was elected a member of the Party Central Committee.

He was overjoyed when news arrived that another big oilfield had been found, and suggested that teams which had proved themselves at Taching should be sent there, as well as the best equipment. In the spring of 1970, he visited the new oilfield. The rumbling rig had such an attraction for him that he fell to work immediately. Later, at a national conference on petroleum, he put forward proposals for further expansion of the petroleum industry.

Soon afterwards, he became seriously ill and was hospitalized in Peking. The diagnosis was cancer of the stomach. Awakening after an operation, he said, "I must try to get better as quickly as possible so that I can go on working for the Party." He asked the comrades who came to see him: Was it snowing in Taching? Was production going ahead? Was it cold in the workers' dormitories? He also called on everybody to produce more oil for the state. On November 15, failing to respond to treatment, Comrade Wang Chin-hsi died, after a life-time of whole-hearted service to the people. When the sad tidings reached Taching, people were grief-stricken. They expressed their determination that, like Comrade Wang Chin-hsi, they would strive to make greater contributions to the petroleum industry for the Party, the motherland and the people.

Women Well-Operators

TACHING has a well-operators' team made up entirely of young women. They are former Red Guards who went there three years ago from various parts of the country to take the road pointed out by Chairman Mao of integration with the workers and peasants.

The revolutionary spirit of the Taching workers in serving the people wholly and entirely was a great inspiration and education to them. They made up their minds to devote their youth to the revolution, like the workers. They camped out in the open to take good care of the well, defying wind and snow, never leaving their posts. They persevered in carrying out their assignments faithfully and conscientiously. Early this year, breaking down superstitions, they succeeded in making a hydraulic well-pulling machine and set the first example of women workers in Taching to pull a well.

This won them the commendation of the leading organization. On a number of occasions their representatives together attended congresses of activists in the living study and application of Mao Tsetung Thought convened by the Nanking Units, and in 1969 their delegates participated together in the National Day celebrations in Peking and were overjoyed to see our great leader Chairman Mao.

The Party organizations of the first company and the Shuangyang brigade take care to give play to the role of the Party members as models and to the role of militia as backbone in the production teams. The armymen and civilians have built a network of irrigation ditches on a barren strip of beach, turning it into good fields which can be drained as well as irrigated. In the past, the state had to supply the brigade with more than 300,000 jin of grain annually. Now in the locality, every team has reserves and every household a surplus. Each year the brigade hands over to the state more than 400,000 jin of grain.

Fighters of the Cambodian People's National Liberation Armed Forces on the march.

IN a year and more since March 18, 1970, the Cambodian armed forces and people, led by Samdech Sihanouk and the National United Front of Cambodia, have exercised the might of people's war and annihilated 170,000 enemy troops, including some 70,000 U.S. and Saigon puppet troops.

Through armed struggle, the patriotic Cambodian armed forces and civilians have brought about an excellent situation for encircling the cities from the countryside. Up to now, they have liberated 70 per cent of their country, encompassing a population of four million, and linked together the liberated areas. In these areas, people's political power has been established at various levels through elections. It is carrying out the line and policies laid down by the National United Front and the Royal Government of National Union of Cambodia and leading the people to fight resolutely, take an active part in production and support the front.

The National United Front and the Royal Government of National Union of Cambodia have won the backing of large numbers of people from all strata in the country. Many patriotic personages have rallied round the National United Front in response to Samdech Sihanouk's call and joined the ranks in resisting U.S. imperialist aggression and fighting for national salvation.

In Yen-an, in front of the platform on which Chairman Mao delivered his speech Serve the People in 1944, commanders and fighters of the Ansai company review the teaching of the great leader on serving the people heart and soul.

Helping commune members to carry barnyard manure to the fields.

CHANG Szu-teh was a soldier in the Guards Regiment of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party. One day in September, 1944 while making charcoal in Shihchia Ravine in Ansai County, northern Shensi, he was killed by the sudden collapse of a kiln. To commemorate this Communist who served the people loyally, Chairman Mao delivered a speech entitled, Serve the People. For nearly 30 years, the idea of serving the people heart and soul inculcated by Chairman Mao has nurtured countless numbers of revolutionary fighters and advanced collectives. The P.L.A. company stationed in Ansai is an outstanding example.

The company was transferred to Ansai for garrison duty in 1968. Soon after its arrival, the leadership at the higher level recounted the heroic deeds of Chang Szu-teh, and the Party branch of the company took the commanders and fighters to visit the place where Chang Szu-teh had gloriously laid down his life. An on-the-spot class was run for studying Chairman Mao's brilliant work, Serve the People, so that they could understand this great teaching more deeply. Immensely inspired, they set about to examine in what respects they lagged behind Chang Szu-teh ideologically and work out measures for revolutionization.

The Idea of Serving the People

Li Tung-sheng, Party branch secretary and company commander, took the lead in developing revolutionary traditions more consciously. Always ahead in completing tasks of all kinds, he became known among the rank and file as the "locomotive of the company".

With the Party branch setting the pace, the mental outlook of the company underwent a deep-going change. Once a woman commune member hemorrhaged during an illness, and emergency measures were called for. The commanders and fighters rushed to the hospital to donate blood and the patient was soon declared out of danger.

For the past several years, the company has accomplished its various tasks with flying colours and has been cited a four-good company three years in a row. Its representatives gloriously attended the congress of activists in the living study and application of Mao Tsetung Thought sponsored by the P.L.A. Lanchow Units.

Bulwark of Continuing the Revolution

ACTING upon Chairman Mao's teaching, "We Communists seek not official posts, but revolution. Everyone of us must be a thoroughgoing revolutionary in spirit", members of the Party committee of an artillery regiment attached to the P.L.A. Kunming Units consciously strive to live up to the strict standards demanded of advanced proletarian elements. Although they are leading cadres, they in no way differentiate themselves from the rank and file. They often go down to the companies to take part in basic military training and modestly learn from the ordinary soldiers. The examples they set in words and deeds inspire the commanders and fighters of the whole regiment to do a good job of all their tasks. United closely and full of vigour, they are good leaders of their unit.

Members of the Party committee conscientiously study books by Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin, and Chairman Mao's writings. Even while carrying out assignments in different places, they still maintain contact through correspondence to work out study plans, exchange gains in study and report on progress in ideological remoulding. At the same time, by inviting outstanding cadres and fighters to take part in committee activities, the members learn from their advanced thinking and deeds and ask for their comments and criticisms. This has effectively promoted the ideological revolutionization of the Party committee members.

In the living study and application of Mao Tsetung Thought, the committee has been cited an advanced collective in the Kunming Units, while 14 out of its 18 members have been chosen as representatives to congresses of activists convened at regimental or higher level.
